It should. While more work needs to be done to enshrine an independent Senate, the fact that over 20% more legislation was amended than previous governments speaks for itself. Independence guarantees sober second thought. #cdnpoli

A nighttime photograph of a city highway. The road is filled with streaks of red and yellow light from moving vehicles, creating a sense of motion. In the background, a large illuminated billboard stands prominently. The billboard features the text "14 BENEFITS OF BILLBOARD advertising" in a bold, modern font. The word "BILLBOARD" is in blue, "advertising" is in pink script, and "14 BENEFITS OF" is in dark blue. The billboard is mounted on a metal frame and is set against a dark sky with city lights from buildings in the distance.

FACEBOOK UNDER FIRE

Five points for anger, one for a ‘like’: How Facebook’s formula fostered rage and misinformation

Facebook engineers gave extra value to emoji reactions, including ‘angry,’ pushing more emotional and provocative content into users’ news feeds

By Jeremy B. Merrill and Will Oremus

Updated October 26, 2021 at 1:04 p.m. EDT | Published October 26, 2021 at 7:00 a.m. EDT

<https://www.washingtonpost.com/technology/2021/10/26/facebook-angry-emoji-algorithm/>

Behind the scenes, Facebook programmed the algorithm that decides what people see in their news feeds to use the reaction emoji as signals to push more emotional and provocative content — including content likely to make them angry.

Starting in 2017, Facebook's ranking algorithm treated emoji reactions as five times more valuable than “likes”, internal documents reveal. The theory was simple: Posts that prompted lots of reaction emoji tended to keep users more engaged, and keeping users engaged was the key to Facebook's business.

The company's data scientists confirmed in 2019 that posts that sparked angry reaction emoji were disproportionately likely to include misinformation, toxicity and low-quality news.

Mood manipulation (2012)

We now know that's exactly what happened two years ago. For one week in January 2012, data scientists skewed what almost 700,000 Facebook users saw when they logged into its service. Some people were shown content with a preponderance of happy and positive words; some were shown content analyzed as sadder than average. And when the week was over, these manipulated users were more likely to post either especially positive or negative words themselves.

Election manipulation (2012)

About 611,000 users (1%) received an 'informational message' at the top of their news feeds, which encouraged them to vote, provided a link to information on local polling places and included a clickable 'I voted' button and a counter of Facebook users who had clicked it. About 60 million users (98%) received a 'social message', which included the same elements but also showed the profile pictures of up to six randomly selected Facebook friends who had clicked the 'I voted' button. The remaining 1% of users were assigned to a control group that received no message.

Those who saw the social message were 2% more likely to click the 'I voted' button. The social message, the researchers estimate, directly increased turnout by about 60,000 votes.

Moderation?

- Moderation must be as cheap as possible

TECH Aug 1, 2022, 11:00 AM

A factory line of terrors: TikTok's African content moderators complain they were treated like robots, reviewing videos of suicide and animal cruelty for less than $3 an hour.

- As TikTok gains in popularity in the Middle East and North Africa, it's ramping up its content moderation operation in the region.
- But reviewers for the platform complain they're watching hours of graphic videos with little psychological help.
- "The devil of this job is that you get sick slowly," one former content moderator told Insider.

A Genocide Incited on Facebook, With Posts From Myanmar's Military

Leer en español

NAYPYIDAW, Myanmar — They posed as fans of pop stars and national heroes as they flooded Facebook with their hatred. One said Islam was a global threat to Buddhism. Another shared a false story about the rape of a Buddhist woman by a Muslim man.

The Facebook posts were not from everyday internet users. Instead, they were from Myanmar military personnel who turned the social network into a tool for ethnic cleansing, according to former military officials, researchers and civilian officials in the country.

The US complaint cites Facebook posts that appeared in a Reuters report, with one in 2013 stating: “We must fight them the way Hitler did the Jews, damn Kalars [a derogatory term for Rohingya people].” Another post in 2018, showing a photograph of a boatload of Rohingya refugees, says: “Pour fuel and set fire so that they can meet Allah faster.”

The number of Rohingya killed in 2017, during the Myanmar military’s “clearance operations”, is likely to be more than 10,000, according to the medical charity Médecins sans Frontières.

About 1 million Rohingyas live in Cox’s Bazar refugee camp, in south-eastern Bangladesh, where McCue and Mishcon de Reya, which is also working on the UK-based case, expect to recruit more claimants.

informed leadership. But challenges remain, and we can't count on Bluesky to do this right without support.

Critics have pointed out that Bluesky has yet to turn a profit and is currently running on venture capital, the same corporate structure that brought us Facebook, Twitter, and other social media companies. As of now, there's no option to exit Bluesky and take your data and network with you, because there are no other servers that run the AT Protocol. Bluesky CEO Jay Graber deserves credit for her stewardship so far, and for attempting to avoid the dangers of advertising incentives. But the process by which capitalism degrades tech products is so predictable that Cory Doctorow coined a now-popular term for it: enshittification.

Just finished manually blocking a ton of bigoted domains.

I noticed:

They're extremely lonely. They're angry & sad that the fediverse is reasonably efficient at blocking them before they can cause harm & have their fun. Without targets they can attack as a group, their friendships fall apart.

They're creating "normie" accounts so they can pretend to not be bigoted so they can have human connection. They complain that they can't keep the facade up forever & they'll end up alone.
